

ABSTRACT

A determination whether a network is connected to the Internet is made by configuring a first computer in the network to periodically generate a heartbeat message
5 to a second computer outside the network. The second computer determines whether the heartbeat message is received, the receipt of which heartbeat message is indicative that the network is connected to the Internet.